A NOTE FROM THE PUBLISHER

This issue, we give you the Steiner Brothers, Rick and Scott, who, as University of Michigan graduates, are truly Big Blue. In the eyes of many experts, they are the most impressive tag team ever to have stepped into the ring. Sure, they lost their World Wrestling Federation Tag Team Title to the Quebecers a few months ago, but it was, our editors believe, an unfair situation. They were snookered. We—and a zillion other people—fully expect that the Steiner Brothers will once again wear the Tag Team Belts. It's bound to happen.

Part of what makes the Steiners so extraordinary is the way they wrestle with science and yet reckless abandon when it comes to the security of their own bodies. They seem fearless. They attempt unbelievable moves and maneuvers.

So get ready. Here come the Steiner Brothers.

BIG BLUE BASHERS

The Story Of The Steiners

BY KEITH ELLIOT GREENBERG

To put it mildly, Rick and Scott Steiner were the big men on campus.

The University of Michigan is known for its athletics, but the Steiner Brothers were in a category all their own. Rick's aggressive style on the wrestling mat earned him the tag "Dog Face Gremlin." Younger brother Scott was regional wrestling champion in the heavyweight division. If they'd wanted to, they could have torn up the campus. In everything they tried, the Steiners were stars. Fellow students trailed after them in the hallways, hoping some of their magnetism would rub off. Newcomers made it a point to invite the duo to parties at the dorms, knowing that the Steiners could always draw a crowd. When Rick or Scott walked into the cafeteria, frail freshmen jumped out of their chairs and offered them a seat.

One classmate remembers Rick winking at a nervous lowerclassman and responding, "You were here first."

The Steiners were—and still are—gentlemen athletes. They were merciless, plowing down the opposition and terrifying the bench-warmers with adrenaline-fueled fervor. But away from the action, the Steiners were calm and respectful. "Our father taught us that you don't make it in the world without being focused," Scott recalls. "If you have a lot of aggression, it's wise to channel it into one area—in our case, sports—and not waste it all over the place. And that's what we did. Once the match or game was over, we were just regular guys, trying to earn our grades. But when it was time to go the next time, we blocked everything else out, turned on the engines and blasted into whatever was in our way."

Perspective

Rick set the tone for his younger sibling, joining the wrestling team at a local YMCA at age 11. "When I saw Rick winning matches and bringing home trophies, I wanted some of that for myself," said Scott, who'd go on to garner renown for his track and field feats in addition to football and wrestling. "But I was just a kid, and I had a lot to learn. I saw how much sweat Rick was willing to put out just to prepare himself to compete. And I decided to follow in his footsteps. I have to say that he was a pretty good role model."

In high school, Rick was a standout on the wrestling team, but he was too light to vie for a heavyweight title. Rather than accept limitations, he chose to change the situation. Balancing schoolwork and his other athletic commitments, the elder Steiner threw himself into an intensive weight training program. By senior year, he'd cleared the heavyweight class by 15 pounds.

But everyone must make a place for himself after leaving the protected confines of school. Those who don't end up telling stories of their high school and college glory days to uninterested co-workers at dismal jobs. Rick and Scott would not allow themselves to suffer the same fate. Instead, they used their athletic credentials to work their way into the World Wrestling Federation.

Wrestling fans are always amazed when they're enlightened to the fact that about a year ago the Steiners weren't even part of the World Wrestling Federation. In an incredibly short time, they've made an indelible mark in the squared circle, setting a new standard for tag team wrestling.

While both qualify as powerhouses, Rick is the hardier of the two, a literal brick wall of a man. He batters bodies with belly-to-belly suplexes and rattles brains with ferocious clotheslines, one of which he calls the Steinerline, and debilitating piledrivers.

Scott is the innovator, responsible for the pair's signature maneuvers of mixing strength, agility and quick tagging. Scott's specialty is the Frankensteiner, consisting of an inverted head-scissors into a flip into a pinning combination. The younger Steiner also came up with the strategy to hoist a foe on his shoulder while Rick sailed off the top rope and finished off the man with a bulldog headlock.

Several months ago, Scott gave readers of World Wrestling Federation Magazine an insight into the roots of the pair's repertoire. "Rick and I spent years perfecting the art of wrestling, and through trial and error we came up with some maneuvers that nobody else thought of using in the ring," Scott stated. "Rick's Steinerline is a modified clothesline. He uses his incredible quadriceps, hamstrings and glutes to propel into his opponents and his thick shoulders to do the real damage. The Frankensteiner took me years to develop and master. I invented it when I graduated from the University of Michigan, and it's been one of my best offensive weapons ever since. The best part about the Frankensteiner is that I can use it at the drop of a hat, which brings the element of surprise into play."

Although, as of this writing, the World Wrestling Federation Tag Team Championship is out of their possession, most Steiner supporters regard this as a temporary situation. The Brothers are just too good to remain beltless for long. Some claim the Steiners are the greatest tag team the World Wrestling Federation has ever seen. Even their staunchest adversaries admit that the tandem is getting even better with each passing month.

The Steiners' first test came at the Royal Rumble against Beau and Blake Beverly. Like Rick and Scott, Beau and Blake had the intuitive tag team skills only found among brothers. Despite the fanfare surrounding the Steiners' recent arrival, Beau and Blake were the veterans in the match, well-versed in the rough ways of the Federation.

Indeed, the Beverlys' brawling skills bought them an early lead in the confrontation. Creating an atmosphere of confusion, Beau distracted the referee while Blake choked Scott with the tag rope. Then both of the platinum-haired brothers took turns punishing the younger Steiner with kicks and backbreakers. But even in the darkest moments of the match, Scott never contemplated giving up. "I'd worked my whole life to get to the World Wrestling Federation," he recounts. "There was no way I was gonna throw it all away now."

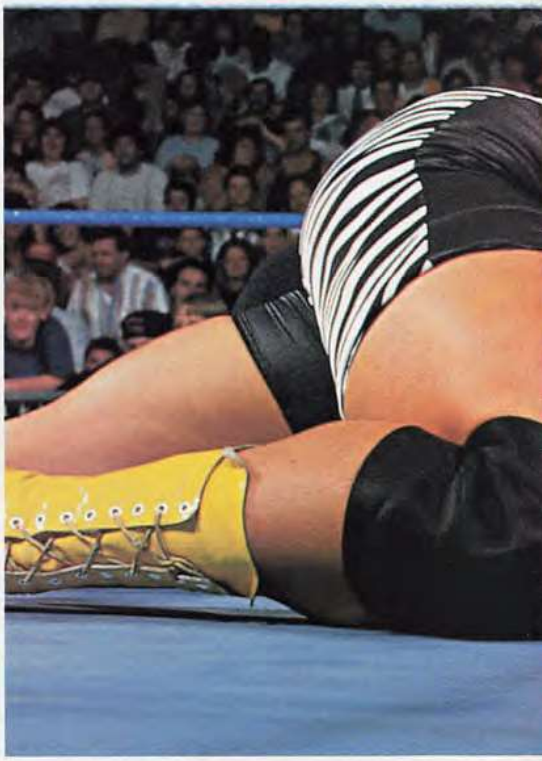
Eventually, Scott managed to tag Rick, who—furious at the double-teaming doled out on his sibling—went after the Beverlys, hurting Blake with a high back-bodydrop and a belly-to-belly suplex and leveling Beau with the Steinerline.

Exhibiting their resilience, the Beverlys stayed in the match, recapturing the lead at one point with more double-teaming. But the Steiners showed that they loved a good brawl as much as anyone else. In the midst of a free-for-all, Scott caught Blake with the Frankensteiner and claimed the first victory ever for the Steiners in a major pay-per-view event.

No one denied that this was a sensational victory. "I was pumped," Rick enthuses, "hearing the ref slap the canvas one-two-three and getting the win in front of all those people." But there was little time to gloat. Before long, the Steiners were slated to take on another difficult squad, the Head Shrinkers, at WrestleMania IX.

While the Steiners certainly held the edge in technique, the Head Shrinkers, Fatu and Samu, were equally tough. Raised in the jungles of Samoa on a diet of raw flesh and hand-to-hand combat, the Shrinkers were cannibals in every sense of the word. With manager Afa coaxing them from ringside, Fatu and Samu came to the extravaganza with the express purpose of skewering the Steiners.

Every expert believes that the Steiners will again sit at the top of the tag team mountain.



For their part, Rick and Scott were resolved to demonstrate their own savage side. When Fatu came at Scott with a flurry of punches, Scott threw fists right back, never betraying the slightest hint of fear. When the Steiners were thrown out of the ring, they re-entered not weary but invigorated. Rather than slipping under the bottom rope to resume the battle, Rick and Scott mounted the same turnbuckle and blasted the Head Shrinkers with a double flying clothesline. When Fatu hoisted Rick onto his shoulders and Samu attempted a clothesline from the top rope, the older Steiner managed to snatch the soaring Samoan and drive him into the mat with a powerslam. Sensing the Shrinkers' disorientation, Scott went after Samu with a Frankensteiner, scoring a stunning triumph at the World Wrestling Federation's most important card of the year.

But the Steiner Brothers' most important match of the year would come a short time later. Despite their brief track record in the World Wrestling Federation, Rick and Scott were ready to go for the ultimate prize, the Tag Team Title held by Money Inc.— Million Dollar Man Ted DiBiase and Irwin R. Schyster, aka IRS.

Despite their notorious bravado, Money Inc. privately expressed reservations about the contest. Rick and Scott seemed to have everything in their favor: muscle, swiftness, teamwork and—most important—momentum. That drive would motivate the Steiners to continually petition the Federation officials until they received a title shot, then overwhelm DiBiase and IRS in a shocking upset.

The title change came June 14, 1993, at the Convention Center in Columbus, Ohio. Money Inc. took control midway through the clash by double-teaming Scott. The younger Steiner endured, waiting for his moment to shift the scales. When he collided head-to-head with IRS, Scott took advantage of IRS' momentary confusion to tag his brother. Rick tore into the ring, flooring both adversaries with the Steinerline. DiBiase recovered long enough to try a piledriver on Rick. But a rejuvenated Scott thwarted the effort by smashing DiBiase with an off-the-top-rope clothesline. Rick quickly covered the Million Dollar Man, and the Steiners were Tag Team Champions.

"How did I feel?" Rick asks. "It was the greatest moment of my life. Too bad it didn't last that long."

While the wrestling world was still abuzz over the title change, an equally shocking incident occurred. Two days after the championship switch, the rivals hooked up again at the Metro Centre in Rockford, Illinois. Money Inc. paid no regard to the rules this night. DiBiase slammed Scott on the hard concrete at ringside, and IRS clocked him with a loaded metal briefcase. The younger Steiner was out cold, and Money Inc. reclaimed the belts.

Every fan in Rockford knew the victory was tainted. Within minutes of the match, telegrams and faxes were flooding into World Wrestling Federation President Jack Tunney's office. The Federation Championship Committee cloistered themselves in a room for several hours to review the questionable circumstances of the match. Their conclusion: The Steiners were entitled to one more chance.

Judgment Day came June 19, 1993, at the fabled St. Louis Arena in St. Louis, Missouri. Aware that Scott was still aching from his pounding three days earlier, Money Inc. again targeted the younger Steiner, unleashing suplexes, axhandles, chokeholds and eye rakes. Scott held tough, waiting for IRS to leave himself open, then tagging him with a kick to the face.

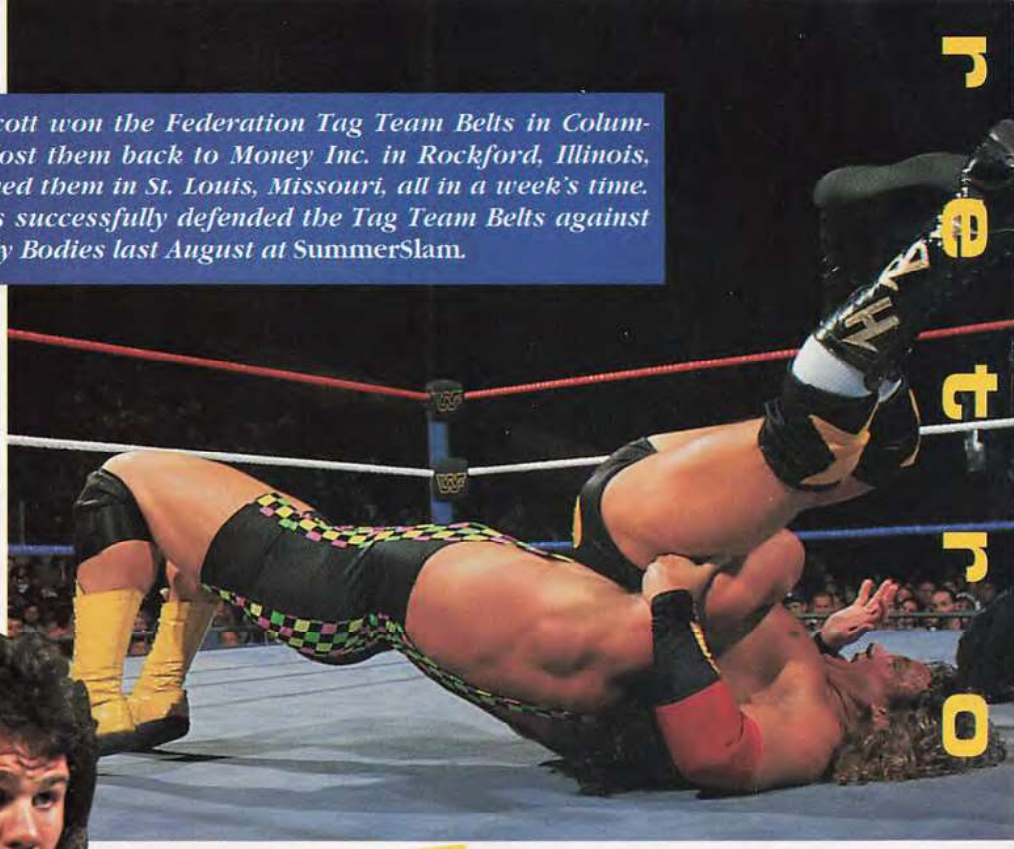
In came Rick to deliver a series of Steinerlines. From the apron, Scott shouted to his brother, "Let me in, Rick! Let me in! I want 'em bad!"

"Scotty felt he'd taken a beating from those two guys," Rick says. "Now he could smell blood—he knew we had them on the run. It was only fair to let him finish them off."

Tagging in, Scott zoned in on DiBiase, Irish-whipping him before going airborne and letting loose with the Frankensteiner. DiBiase's body snapped to the canvas. Scott covered him with the lateral press—and the Steiners had won their second championship in five days.



Rick and Scott won the Federation Tag Team Belts in Columbus, Ohio, lost them back to Money Inc. in Rockford, Illinois, and reclaimed them in St. Louis, Missouri, all in a week's time. The Steiners successfully defended the Tag Team Belts against the Heavenly Bodies last August at SummerSlam.

The titlists declared that this would be an "open reign." Anyone who wanted a shot at the belts would get it. The Head Shrinkers and Well Dunn—Timothy Well and Steven Dunn—lined up, along with a then little-known team from the small Smoky Mountain Wrestling organization, the Heavenly Bodies. Led by manager Jim Cornette, Doctor of Desire Tom Prichard and Gigolo Jimmy Del Rey had astounded the fans in places like Hazard, Kentucky, and Duffield, Virginia, with daredevil moves bordering on the suicidal. Now they wanted to grab everything at once, challenging the Steiners for the most coveted prize in tag team wrestling at SummerSlam.

Rick countered with a one-sentence response: "If they wanna rumble, bring 'em on."

In the SummerSlam matchup, the Bodies revealed themselves as a hidden treasure. They were as talented as they were brutal. Prichard and Del Rey jumped the Steiners at the bell, and the Gigolo nearly flattened Rick with an upside-down flip into the midsection. Prichard blasted Scott with a crescent kick, and Steiner ended up on the arena floor. Then Del Rey charged across the ring and took the wind out of Scott with a breathtaking moonsault.

Yet, for every maneuver that moved the Bodies forward, the Steiners found a way to push back the challengers' assault. When Del Rey tried a crucifix on Scott, the younger Steiner repositioned his body to trap his foe in a suplex. Rick then tagged in and bulldogged Del Rey from the top rope. Del Rey attempted to end the match by moonsaulting the Dog Face Gremlin, but Rick stepped out of the way, and Prichard took the blow. "Let's put these two away," Rick told his brother as Scott caught Del Rey in the Frankensteiner and pinned his shoulders to the mat.

Rick and Scott were unstoppable. Indeed, it took an unexpected rule change to pry the Tag Team Championship out of their grasp.

Before the September 13, 1993, broadcast of Monday Night Raw on USA Network, the Steiners' scheduled opponents, the Quebecers, Jacques and Pierre, insisted that the match be wrestled according to Province of Quebec rules. Among the stipulations from the French-speaking region: A title can change hands via disqualification, the piledriver is illegal and diving off the top rope is prohibited.

The Steiners accepted the conditions, but Rick, in particular, seemed uncomfortable with the agreement. On one occasion, he mounted the turnbuckles and only halted his attack when Scott reminded him of the off-the-top-rope rule. Later, the Dog Face Gremlin nearly piledrove one of his foes, but Scott hollered for his brother to stop.

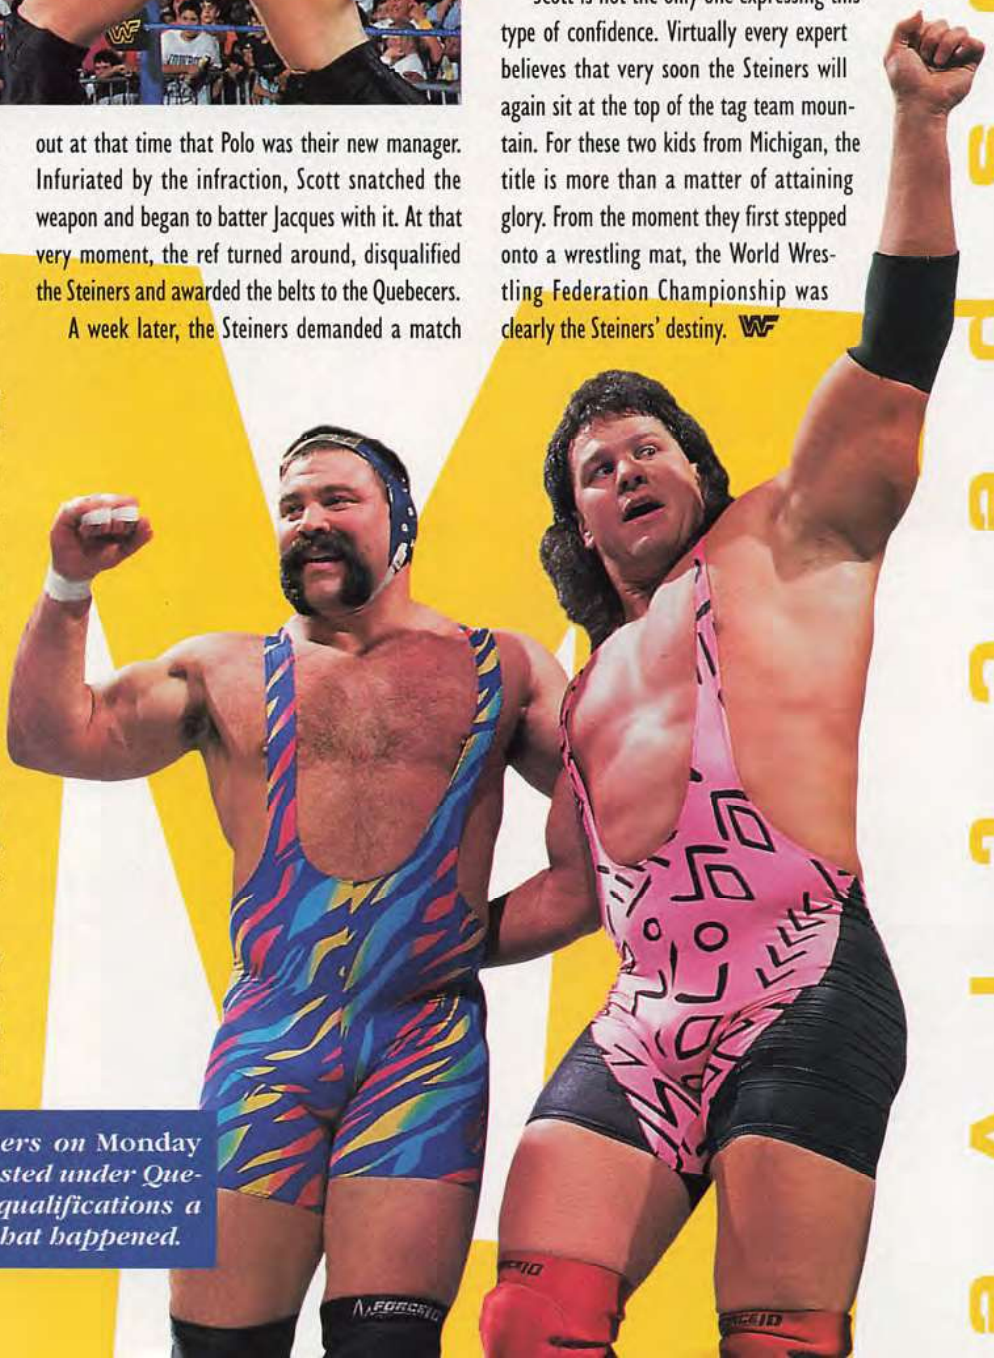
Ironically, it was Scott who ended up costing the Steiners the match. When Johnny Polo brought a hockey stick to ringside, the French Canadians were quick to use it behind the referee's back. We found out at that time that Polo was their new manager. Infuriated by the infraction, Scott snatched the weapon and began to batter Jacques with it. At that very moment, the ref turned around, disqualified the Steiners and awarded the belts to the Quebecers.

A week later, the Steiners demanded a match with their own provisions. The Quebecers would put up their man—Pierre—against Scott. If Scott won, the Steiners would get another shot at the title. After some bickering, the Quebecers eventually agreed to pit Pierre against the younger Steiner. To no one's surprise, Scott got the nod in the contest.

But as of this writing, the Quebecers have gone back on their word. They haven't granted the Steiners another title match, although the two teams clashed in several nontitle contests last fall. Yet, Rick and Scott persist, targeting Jacques and Pierre at every opportunity.

At the last Survivor Series, the Steiners teamed with the Undertaker and Luger against the Quebecers, Yokozuna and Borga. The point, Scott says, "was giving the Quebecers a thrashing and showing them their day in the sun is coming to a close."

Scott is not the only one expressing this type of confidence. Virtually every expert believes that very soon the Steiners will again sit at the top of the tag team mountain. For these two kids from Michigan, the title is more than a matter of attaining glory. From the moment they first stepped onto a wrestling mat, the World Wrestling Federation Championship was clearly the Steiners' destiny. WF



The Steiners faced the Quebecers on* Monday Night Raw. *The match was contested under Quebec Province rules, making disqualifications a basis for a title change. That's what happened.

SPOTLIGHT INTERVIEW

FEW TAG TEAMS HAVE EVER INSPIRED SUCH INSTANT FASCINATION AS RICK AND SCOTT STEINER. THE DUO ENTERED THE WORLD WRESTLING FEDERATION BOASTING ALL THE FUNDAMENTALS NECESSARY TO FLOURISH IN THE MEAN WORLD INHABITED BY SUCH MENACING PAIRS AS THE BEVERLY BROTHERS, THE HEAD SHRINKERS AND MONEY INC. BUT THE STEINERS PROVED THEIR SUPERIORITY, VANQUISHING THE BEVERLYS AT LAST YEAR'S ROYAL RUMBLE, BESTING THE HEAD SHRINKERS AT WRESTLEMANIA IX AND CAPTURING THE TAG TEAM CHAMPIONSHIP FROM MONEY INC. ALTHOUGH THE QUEBECERS, JACQUES AND PIERRE, WOULD SNARE THE BELTS IN A CONTROVERSIAL MATCH ON MONDAY NIGHT RAW, MOST FANS STILL CONSIDER RICK AND SCOTT THE BEST TAG TEAM IN THE FEDERATION. AND THE STEINERS BELIEVE THE BEST IS YET TO COME!

BEYOND THE FAMILY TREE.

Editors: Is there any one ingredient standing out as key to the Steiners' success?

Scott: Hard work.

Rick: And, being brothers. It's in the genes.

Editors: A lot has been made of your amateur backgrounds in college. After being in the heat of the World Wrestling Federation tag team scene, do you feel that you still rely on your college experience, or have you moved on?

Rick: You can never move on from the fundamentals. That's what college taught us: fundamental wrestling. And no matter how many fancy moves Scott and I come up with, you always fall back on the fundamentals. Also, competing under a coach—knowing that no matter how good you were, this man had the final word—gave us character.

Scott: It particularly helps in tag teaming. When you listen to a coach, you trust his judgment, no matter how outrageous his plan looks on paper. Same thing with a tag team partner. You see, tag teaming means putting your team first, just like in college sports. You know that team is depending on you, so you do whatever it takes not to let your team or your coach down.

Editors: Most fans, at some point or another, fantasize about climbing into the ring and wrestling a classic match. But, as we all know, it takes a very special person to do that. When your dream finally comes true and you get the chance to step through the ropes, what's the hardest thing to overcome?

Rick: Fear. It doesn't matter what you did in college. It does not matter how technically skilled you are. When you join the World Wrestling Federation, every fight is going to be the fight of your life. You're gonna be meeting guys like the Head Shrinkers, who never got on that amateur mat, who never saw the inside of a classroom, but can still pound you through the canvas and make you scream for mercy.

Scott: It takes a lot of confidence to work on new moves. We do a lot of high risk maneuvers, things no one's ever tried before. You have to really understand your abilities and be able to depend on your partner to develop these moves. Because if you do something wrong, you're finished.

Editors: Sibling rivalry is common in almost every family. Did you two fight a lot as kids?

Rick: Let's just say that you could feel the competitive edge in our house. When one of us set his mind on something and the other thought differently, sparks were gonna fly.

Scott: That's how we were raised: Pick your fights carefully, and then go for it with everything you have inside you. See, nobody ever gave my father anything for nothing. Whatever he got, he paid for with his sweat. He was an immigrant from Germany who risked it all by moving to Michigan and becoming a farmer. The only reason he made it was because he was willing to wake up at the crack of dawn and work all day with the sun beating down on him. But that was his dream—to be a farmer—and he became a darn good one. Rick and I had our own dreams, and our father showed us the way, taught us how to fight for them.

Editors: Which brings us to the World Wrestling Federation Tag Team Championship. How committed are you to fighting until you win back the championship belts?

Rick: Win them back? We never really lost them.

Scott: Not according to World Wrestling Federation rules.

Rick: The Quebecers and their stupid manager Johnny Polo had this whole thing planned ahead of time. I'm convinced of that. They asked for Province of Quebec rules, and we went along with it.

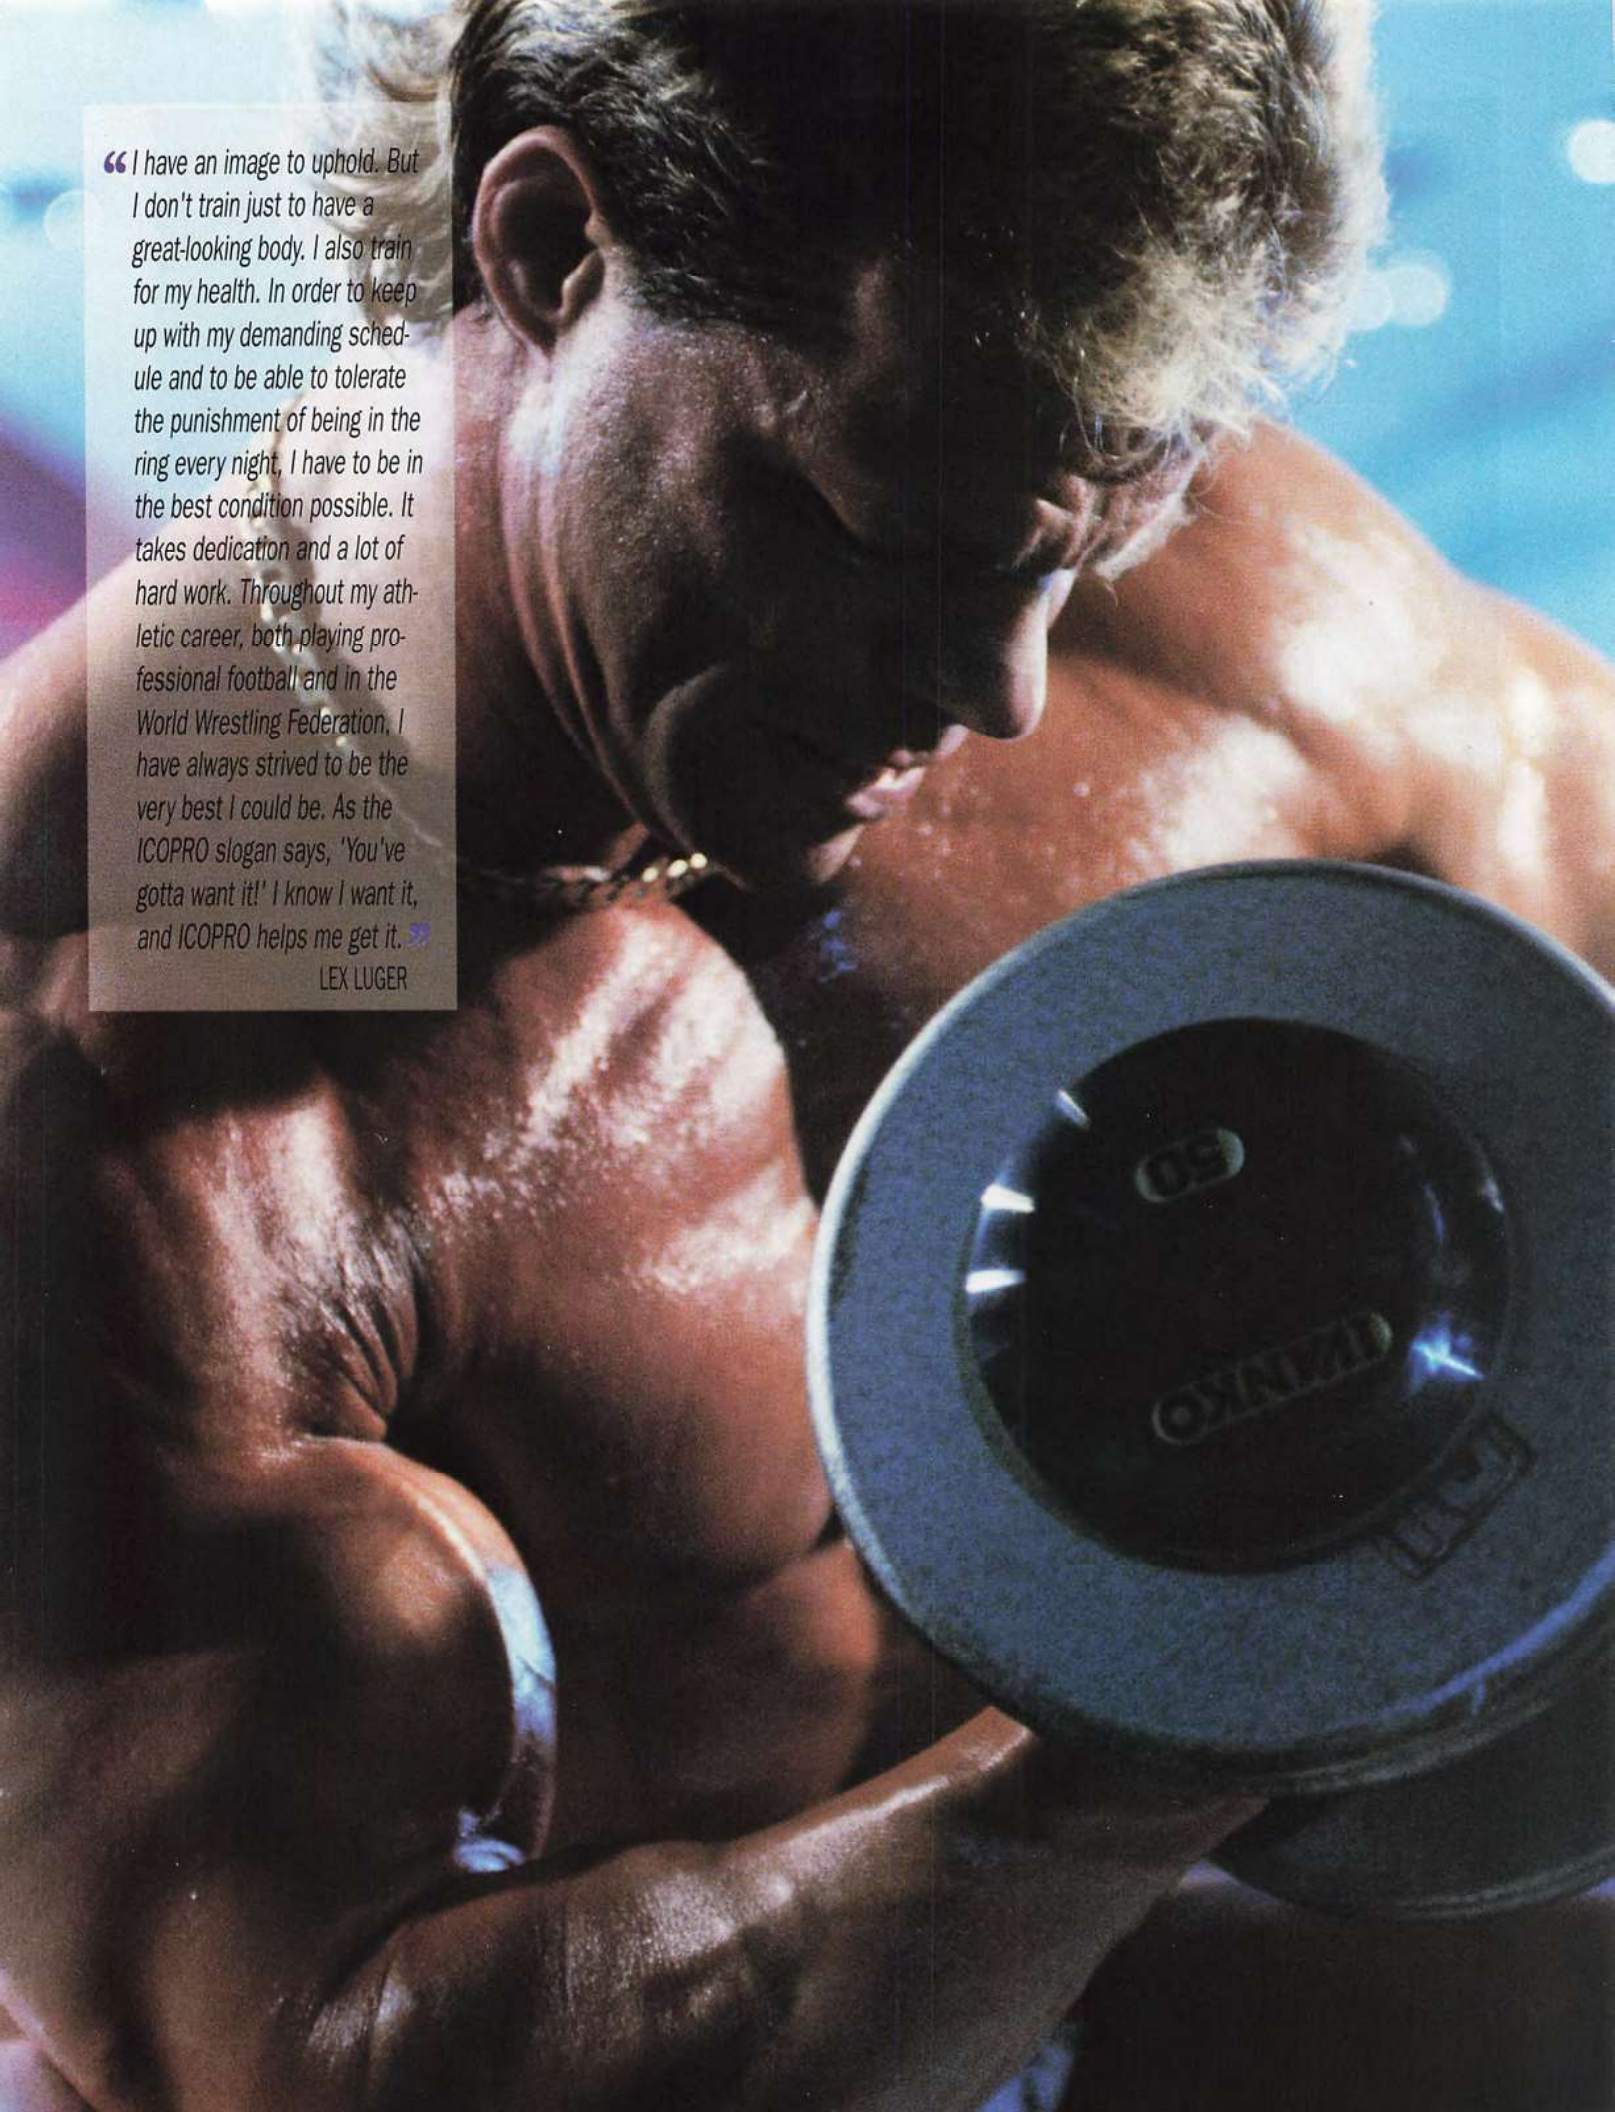
Scott: I'm not a whiner or complainer, and neither is my brother. The Quebecers wanted to get in the ring and hook it up, and we were willing to accommodate them. But when the going got rough, Polo threw that hockey stick in. According to Province of Quebec rules, we could lose the belt on a disqualification, so it was a win-win situation for them. If I didn't get the hockey stick away from them, they would've laid a hurting on me real bad. And when I did get the hockey stick away from them, the referee disqualified us.

Rick: Now they're the champions—but only temporarily.

Editors: Even so, the majority of wrestling fans consider you the best team in the World Wrestling Federation. Is that any kind of consolation?

Scott: In a way, it is. It's great to know that the people respect us so much, even when another team has the championship belts in its possesion. And we will do all that we can do to prove that the people were right to invest their emotions in us. But, really, it does not matter who has the belts or what anyone thinks, besides us. Because the power that drives the Steiner Brothers comes from within. It's a pride that was instilled in us a long time ago, a pride in the Steiner family name—who we are, where we come from and what we stand for—and a pride in wrestling. It's wrestling that's given us life, and now we're giving our lives to wrestling.

Rick: And we're proud of it!



"I have an image to uphold. But I don't train just to have a great-looking body. I also train for my health. In order to keep up with my demanding schedule and to be able to tolerate the punishment of being in the ring every night, I have to be in the best condition possible. It takes dedication and a lot of hard work. Throughout my athletic career, both playing professional football and in the World Wrestling Federation, I have always strived to be the very best I could be. As the ICOPRO slogan says, 'You've gotta want it!' I know I want it, and ICOPRO helps me get it."

LEX LUGER

MAXIMUM MUSCLE MASS AND DEFINITION IN JUST NINE WEEKS

Just like Lex Luger, not everyone trains the same. Some people train six days a week; others have time for only three or four workouts. The ICOPRO™ Professional Bodybuilding Program is designed to provide detailed workouts no matter what your level of experience may be or what your schedule allows.

The program is the result of years of scientific research by top sports scientists combined with the experience of professional athletes who live in the trenches of tough, grueling workouts. For the first time, ICOPRO™ offers you the opportunity to build lean muscle mass in just nine weeks.

The ICOPRO Professional Bodybuilding program splits your workouts into three levels of intensity because science shows us that you can't always train hard. You have to balance periods of high-intensity training with periods of low-intensity training. As a result, the program has you alternate between your A, low-intensity; B, medium-intensity; and C, high-intensity training sessions. Only the ICOPORO Professional Bodybuilding Program provides you with day-to-day workouts for each day of your nine-week program.

The program not only shows you how to train but also answers all your questions about proper nutrition. When should you eat? What should you eat? How much should you eat? All the answers to these questions and more are incorporated into the program. This extensive nutritional information is designed to help you build and retain lean muscle mass.

The eight nutritional supplements contained in each ICOPRO Professional Bobybuilding Program are the most technologically advanced supplements available anywhere - ICOPRO Superprotein®, powerful herbs, perfectly balanced vitamins and minerals, aromatherapy and more.

Whether you've been training for years, months or you are just starting out, this program is designed for you. It's easy to use and perfectly safe.

ON THE ROAD

Steiner Blood: It's Thicker Than Anything

Like other superstars of the World Wrestling Federation, Rick and Scott Steiner lead a fast-paced life when they are on the road traveling to arenas that often are far apart. Occasionally, under the stress of the road, traveling partners may argue or disagree. Not the Steiner Brothers.

We discovered that Rick and Scott are as inseparable away from the ring as they are inside it. For instance, each morning they rise early in an effort to be the first ones at the nearest gym the second its doors are opened to the public.

"We're often flying coast-to-coast or traveling a couple hundred miles a day by car in order to compete at various arenas throughout the United States," says the Dog Face Gremlin. "We adjust our schedules accordingly. If we know that we have a long drive ahead of us, for example, we get up early, train, grab a bite to eat and then hit the road."

Spotlight learned that the Steiners drive at a marathon pace, stopping only to refuel their automobile. That's it. They don't enjoy the sights. They don't stop for snacks. They just get up and go.

"You see," begins Scotty, "if we had other wrestlers in the car with us, they might want to stop more often to eat and things like that. We may get a bit hungry at times, but for us it's more important to get where we're going.

"We're just that kind of people. When there's work to do, we want to get it on. And by that we mean getting to the arena early and preparing our match strategy."

"Actually," adds Rick, "we also use the hours we spend traveling to discuss how we'll handle upcoming opponents. It helps make the time go by. That's another advantage of being brothers. Other wrestlers, even if they are tag team partners, may not be as open with one another because sooner or later they may be opponents. We don't have to worry about that sort of thing."

The Steiners say that while heading for a new town they often talk about the old days and how they grew up.

"We remember all kinds of things and have a lot of laughs about them," says Scott.

Other aspects of business travel have appeal when brothers tour together, says Rick. He says he doesn't have to worry about Scotty skimping on a meal or paying his share of the hotel costs.

"I know he won't be going anywhere!" laughs Rick. "If, for some reason, he or I run short on cash while on the road, one of us will pick up the tab. And there isn't a hurry for reimbursement. We're brothers." WF

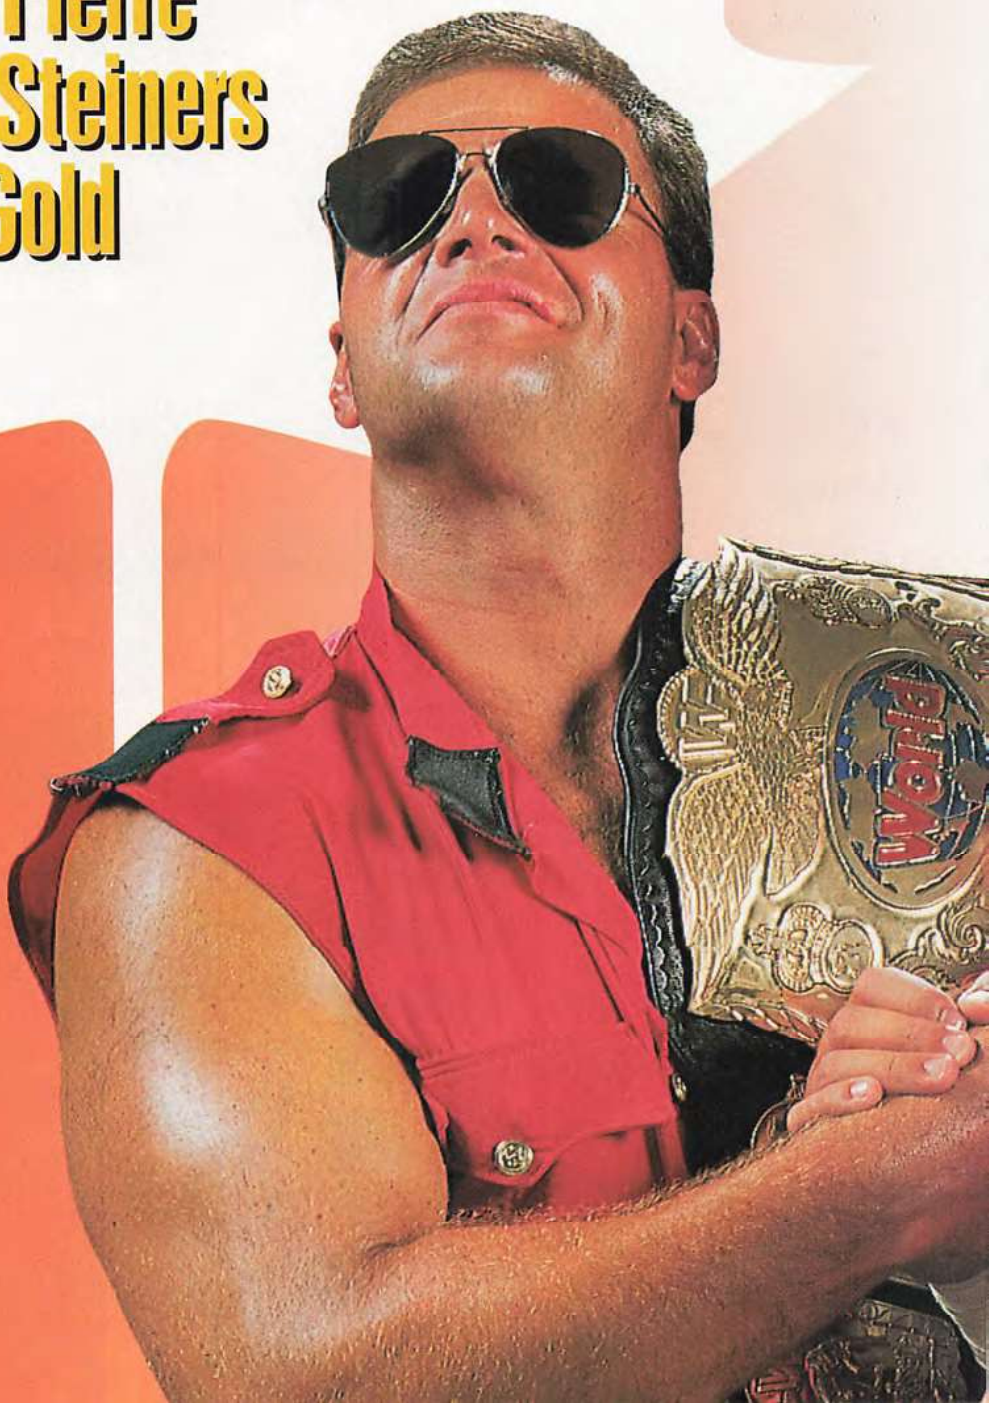
SEPARATISTS

Jacques And Pierre Separated The Steiners From The Cold

The Quebecers — Jacques and Pierre — won the title from the Steiners on Monday Night Raw.



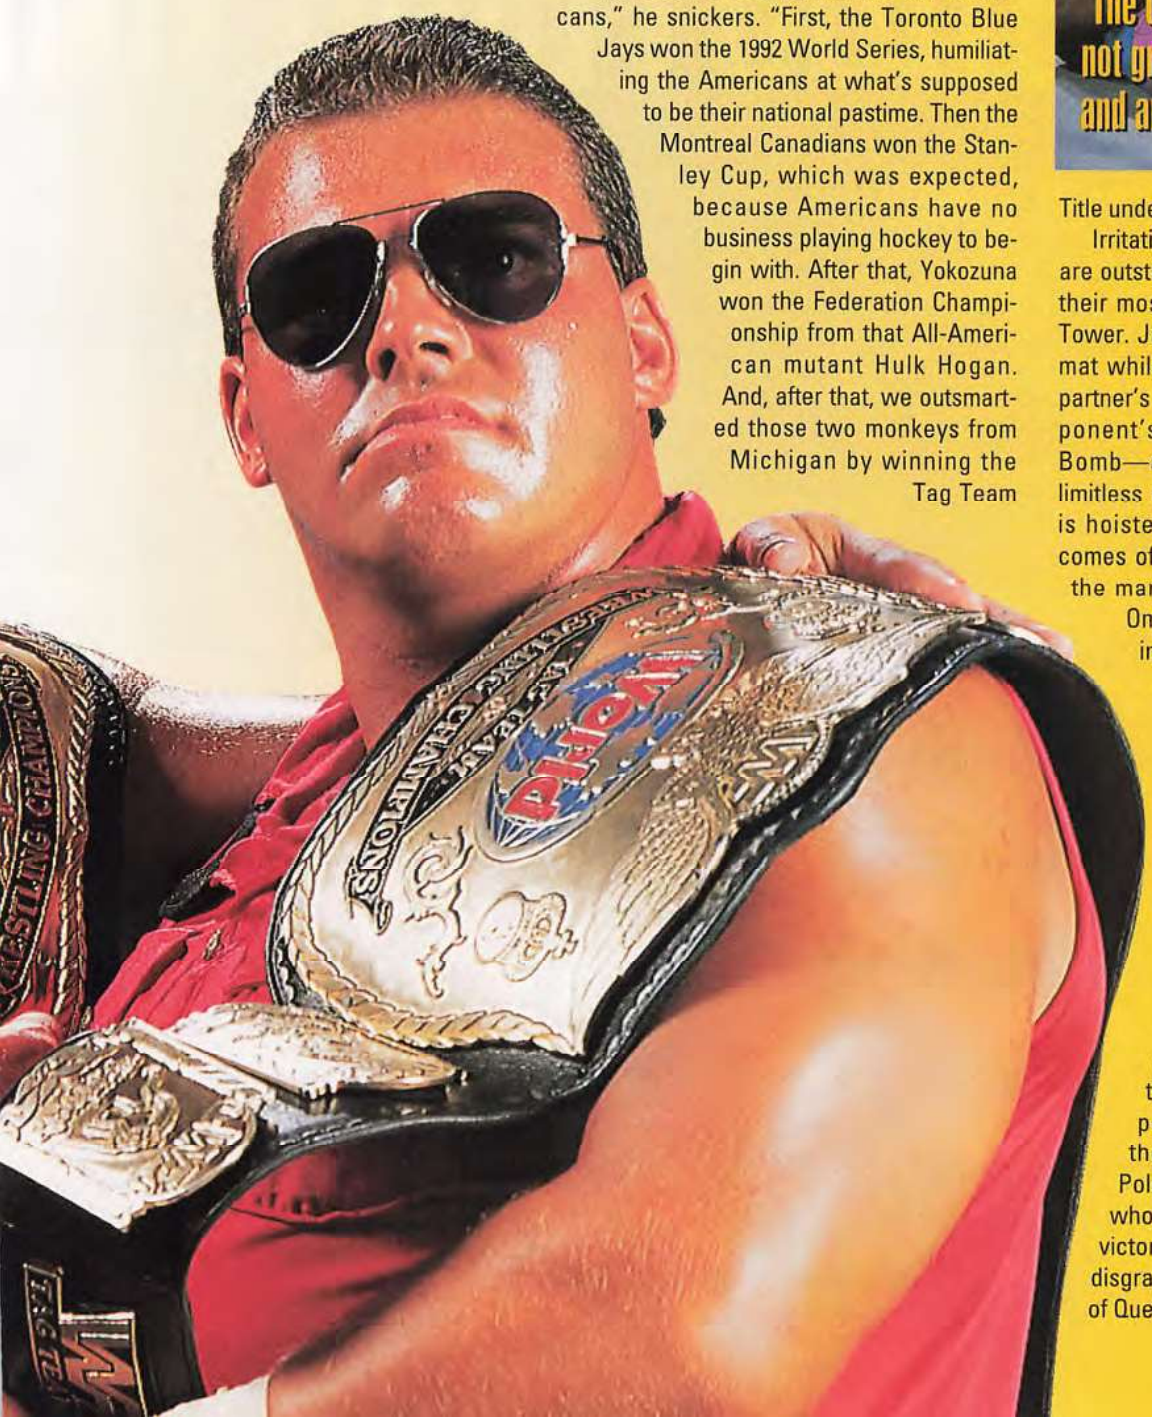
Jacques, the taller, more verbal member of the Quebecers, giggles deviously and blurts out a question for the Steiner Brothers. "Have you ever taken a long walk on a short Pierre?" he snickers, motioning at his squat, powerful partner Pierre. The Quebecers—World Wrestling Federation Tag Team Champions since beating the Steiners on a technicality in a match wrestled under obscure Province of Quebec rules—roar with laughter, as Pierre comes up with a pun of his own.

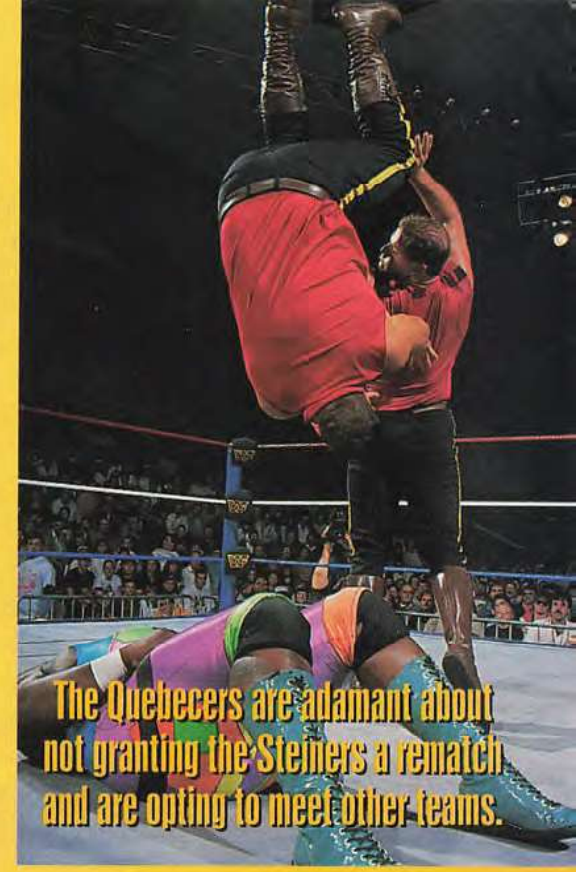
"When you're a jack, you're not a king." He hesitates for a moment before pointing to his teammate and guffawing out the punch line. "Unless you're a Jacques!"

The Quebecers are overcome with glee—and for good reason. Virtually everybody who follows the World Wrestling Federation insists that Rick and Scott Steiner deserve the title. Under Province of Quebec rules, you see, the championship can switch on a disqualification. In the midst of the match in which the belts changed on Monday Night Raw last September, the Quebecers' manager, Johnny Polo, tossed a hockey stick to Jacques. When Scott grappled the stick away and used it on his French-speaking tormentor, the referee disqualified the Steiners and awarded the belts to the tandem from Montreal.

Angry as the Steiners are, they vow to recapture the championship the way they originally won it: clean and in the center of the ring. In the meantime, Jacques and Pierre have told every interviewer who'll listen that the Steiners will never again know championship glory. Why? Because, according to Jacques, Americans are unlucky.

"It's been a bad 18 months for Americans," he snickers. "First, the Toronto Blue Jays won the 1992 World Series, humiliating the Americans at what's supposed to be their national pastime. Then the Montreal Canadians won the Stanley Cup, which was expected, because Americans have no business playing hockey to begin with. After that, Yokozuna won the Federation Championship from that All-American mutant Hulk Hogan. And, after that, we outsmarted those two monkeys from Michigan by winning the Tag Team Title under Province of Quebec rules."





The Quebecers are adamant about not granting the Steiners a rematch and are opting to meet other teams.

Irritating as they are, Jacques and Pierre are outstanding in the squared circle. One of their most wondrous moves is the Quebec Tower. Jacques plants his feet firmly on the mat while Pierre does a handstand off his partner's palms and plummets flat on his opponent's sternum. When the Quebec Bomb—another move in the champions' limitless repertoire—is delivered, the victim is hoisted high by Pierre, while Jacques comes off the top rope with a press across the man's face. Then there's the French Omelette: Jacques puts his adversary in the Boston crab, and Pierre sails off the second rope onto the wrestler's spine.

With that arsenal—along with the underhanded tactics conceived by Johnny Polo—the Quebecers hope to keep the Tag Team Belts for many years. But even in Jacques and Pierre's home province, fans are demanding justice for the Steiners. As one reader in Quebec City wrote to World Wrestling Federation Magazine: "The Quebecers say they represent the French-Canadian people, but they only care about themselves and that creep Johnny Polo. Long live the Steiners, two men who represent all wrestling fans! Their victory over this province's two greatest disgraces will be a victory for the people of Quebec and everywhere else." WF

THE WRESTLING MA

CHINE

By Vince Russo

ma·chine n. 1 An apparatus consisting of interrelated parts with separate functions, used in the performance of some kind of work.

Once-prominent tag teams of the World Wrestling Federation lay in a motionless mountain of twisted and torn flesh. From the decaying wreckage emerges a machine—a blue and gold machine. At the helm of this mechanical masterpiece sits a young ring technician. His long black hair bounces off his mammoth shoulders as he shouts commands from the cockpit. Riding shotgun and listening eagerly is his sidekick: the Dog Face Gremlin. With a headpiece—something he keeps for luck—dangling from his crew-cut head, the canine-human howls wildly with excitement.

With all of its opponents terminated, this tactical machine labeled the Steiner Brothers methodically rambles straight ahead.

The unique wrestling style that Rick and Scott Steiner bring to the squared circle can easily be compared to a metallic monster. Their combination of attitude, general principles and winning strategies has positioned these pit bulls head and shoulders over the rest of the competition.

Former collegiate All-Americans, Rick and Scott possess a tremendous arsenal of technical wrestling maneuvers, many of which were foreign even to the World Wrestling Federation upon their arrival. Oddly enough, wrestling moves may not be their greatest asset. Raw aggression has proved to be the Steiners' main ingredient for success. Many of their opponents have inevitably run into trouble by waiting for them to make the first move. The Steiners, on the other hand, wait for no man. At the sound of the bell, they attack; it is a blitzkrieg of muscular bodies.

Without hesitation, they gain the upper hand by using aggression to obtain control of the match. They force their opponents to react instead of act. This philosophy puts the competition at an early disadvantage. Once the advantage is theirs, the machine rumbles on.

During the match, the Steiners exemplify many of the techniques that they learned at the University of Michigan. They methodically "chain wrestle" or flow through their moves. Everything is sequenced. You will see either brother methodically go from a takedown to a breakdown to a pinning combination. How many times have we seen Scott Steiner go from a double legtakedown to a gut-wrenching suplex to a bodyslam before pinning an opponent? The Steiner Brothers bring a master plan to every match. Each move is a vital piece of their mechanics. When the machine works efficiently, their opponents are usually lying motionless in the middle of the ring.

Mental strategic combat is vital in order to be a successful tag team in the World Wrestling Federation. However, wrestling greats cannot survive on brains alone. Without the backing of raw physical ability, the machine will sputter. Possessing two completely different ring styles, Rick and Scott Steiner may indeed be the strongest duo ever to grace the squared circle.

With jackhammer biceps and a torso resembling that of a gorilla, Scott Steiner's upper body has wrecked many opponents. The younger Steiner's thunderous strength combined with his lightning-quick speed make him an immovable force. From the gut-wrenching suplex to the belly-to-belly to the tilt 'n' whirl slam, Scott's opponents are treated to the roller coaster ride of their lives. In rhythmic pulses, they continuously go from high above his head to face-first into the mat without ever missing a beat. Feeling like a Duncan motorized yo-yo, their punishment has just begun.

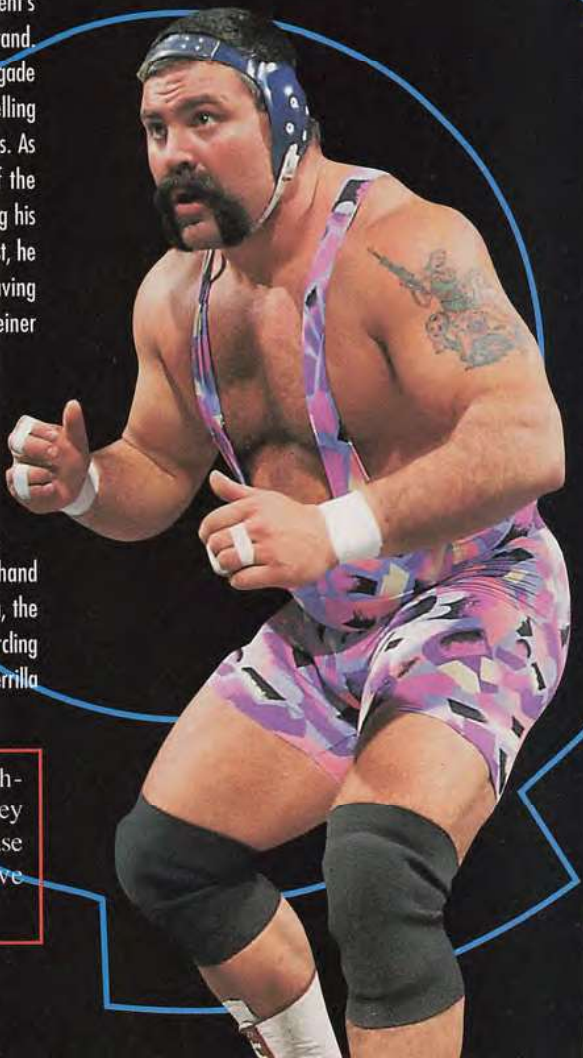
When the ground war ends, the aerial attack begins. With a vengeance, Scott will pounce off the ropes and drill his tree trunk springs through his opponent's chest until his Gumby-like legs can no longer stand. With the enemy gasping for air, the Steiner brigade continues, as they save their best for last. Smelling blood, Scott slingshots his adversary into the ropes. As the dazed foe bounces back into the middle of the ring, Steiner plunges toward him boots-first, vising his legs around the rival's neck. In one powerful thrust, he 360s his competitor's skull into the canvas, leaving him all but brain-dead. Labeled the Frankensteiner due to the flattening of the opponent's cranium, this maneuver causes prospective opponents sleepless nights and queasy bellies.

In contrast to his brother, Rick Steiner prefers not to use scientific methods when conquering the enemy. Leaving his lab coat home, the Dog Face Gremlin relies more on hand-to-hand combat. Immediately upon the start of the match, the hairy canine is on a seek-and-destroy mission. Circling the ring and howling profusely, he begins the guerrilla warfare. A combination of explosive clotheslines and a big right hand puts the adversary at an early disadvantage. The blitz continues at a frantic pace as Rick utilizes his brute strength and punishes his opponent like a mad dog ripping at a worn-out, unwanted rag doll. With saliva filling his mustache, the Dog senses victory. As brother Scott lifts the battered and beaten rival on his mountainous shoulders, Rick climbs the top rope. Once upon his perch, the Gremlin flies through the air, catching his opponent at the neck with his concrete forearm. Now barking from primal instinct, he blankets the enemy and gains the pinfall.

On paper and in the ring there are no holes. The Steiner Brothers have it all. They are two cogs of a machine that possesses the parts needed to be the greatest tag team of all time!



The Steiners work as a smooth-running machine inside the ring. They can dominate the opposition with ease or put their forces into overdrive when wresling from behind.
